Dahlia Culture

If you will follow these simple rules you should not have any trouble growing fine dahlias. Place roots 4 to 5 inches deep and about 3 feet apart each way, in well worked soil. Keep top soil stirred, especially after each rain. Water only in very dry weather, then soak well, do not sprinkle each day. Do not plant in dense shade, as they like plenty of sunshine. After the plants are about 3 feet tall do not stir the soil too deep, this may injure small feeder roots.

Pests

For insects that appear on the plants during growing season, spray with lime-sulphur or dust with nicotine dust.

For bugs that feed on the blooms, spray with a mixture of one teaspoon of paris green to one gallon of water, keeping it well stirred.

Your County Agent will be glad to help you with such problems.

Storage

After killing frost, dig roots carefully, cut the tops off about 1 or 2 inches from the cluster of roots, let them dry out in the air a few hours if possible, then store in a cool, damp cellar where they will not freeze, store with the stem part down if possible, this will reduce stem rot.

If your cellar is too dry, store the roots in a box and cover with peat moss, or sand, or even dry soil. Watch them through the winter and if rot appears, cut it out and dust the roots with dry sulphur.

You can cut the roots apart any time through the winter or spring, leaving part of the stem, or neck with each division. One single root to each division is as good as several. Tops do not have to be removed immediately after frost, they can be cut off whenever you dig the roots.

Wishing you a successful dahlia season,

CARL R. KUNZMAN.
